Undergraduate

- BA in Ancient Mediterranean Studies (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/ancientmediterraneanstudies/ba-ancient-mediterranean-studies/>)
- Minor in Ancient Mediterranean Studies (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/ancientmediterraneanstudies/minor-ancient-mediterranean-studies/>)

The Major in Ancient Mediterranean Studies

The Ancient Mediterranean Studies major is a broad study of the languages, literature, and material cultures from around the Mediterranean in Classical Antiquity. Our primary focus is on the ancient Greek and Roman worlds, as well as the interconnection of those worlds with the wide variety of cultures around the Mediterranean Sea, from North Africa to the North Sea and from the Persian Empire to the Pillars of Heracles. Students completing the major will be well prepared for a variety of careers and for further study in graduate or other professional schools.

Double Majors

Taking a double major in Ancient Mediterranean Studies can benefit you in many ways. If you are already taking another B.A. degree in the College of Arts and Science (like English, History, Philosophy, Anthropology, Economics, Digital Storytelling, Film Studies or Psychological Sciences), a double major in AMS allows you to integrate studying the ancient world into your primary academic focus. If you are pursuing a degree outside of the college of Arts and Sciences, combining the AMS major with degrees like Health Sciences, Business or Engineering not only allows you to receive valuable training in critical thinking, writing, teamwork and public speaking, but also gives you the opportunity to set yourself apart from other graduates in your field when it comes time to apply and interview for jobs and internships.

Departmental Honors

If you are interested in graduating with departmental honors in Ancient Mediterranean Studies, we offer an honors thesis course (AMS 4999) that allows you to earn this distinction. Pursuing departmental honors allows you the opportunity to work closely with one of your professors to craft a research project that will reinforce the writing and critical thinking skills you have acquired throughout your studies and lay the foundation for success in whatever endeavors you choose to follow after graduation.

Graduate

- MA in Ancient Mediterranean Studies (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/ancientmediterraneanstudies/ma-ancient-mediterranean-studies/>)
- PhD in Ancient Mediterranean Studies (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/ancientmediterraneanstudies/phd-ancient-mediterranean-studies/>)

Director of Graduate Studies:

David Schenker
201 Swallow Hall
schenkerd@missouri.edu

The Department of Ancient Mediterranean Studies offers graduate work leading to the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy. The graduate faculty encourages applications from talented and committed students, whose undergraduate careers have given them an appreciation of the rich, many-faceted nature of classical studies and an interest in discovering a place of their own in it. Solid experience in Latin and Greek is of course desirable, but Missouri's MA program is specifically designed for students whose study in one or both of the languages may have come late and who need help getting up to speed rapidly.

Career Preparation

Graduate programs in Ancient Mediterranean Studies are designed to prepare students for professional careers as teachers and scholars of classical literature, archaeology, and ancient civilization, more broadly. Besides acquiring expertise in the traditional classical disciplines, students are encouraged to become familiar with other research areas such as later literatures and cultures, on which the classical tradition has exercised a decided effect, or with programs such as Geographic Information Systems (GIS) or Archaeometry for archaeologists.

Facilities and Resources

Because MU is a contributing member of the American Academy in Rome and the American School of Classical Studies in Athens, the facilities of those organizations are available to graduate students from Missouri. Study in Athens or Rome is often feasible after the completion of a master's degree. On campus, students have at their disposal the resources of Ellis Library, which are excellent in the fields of Greek and Latin languages and literatures, Mediterranean Archaeology, and ancillary fields. This collection is supplemented by the department's LaBrunerie Classics Library. The Museum of Art and Archaeology contains many items of interest to classicists and archaeologists alike.

AMS 1005: Undergraduate Topics in Ancient Mediterranean Studies - Humanities

AMS 1140: Ancient Cities

Today, more than half of the world's population lives in an "urban area." More than 80% of the people who live in the United States dwell in what we call "cities." Every year, more and more people are drawn to these urban centers. Needless to say, this was not always the case. What are the historical origins of cities? What sparked the urbanization process? How were ancient cities organized, and how were they different from the urban centers today? What was it like to walk around ancient Uruk, Athens, or Rome? Ancient Cities is an introductory survey to the urban centers of the ancient Near Eastern, Egyptian, and Mediterranean worlds. We will begin with the earliest known settlements in the Near East, ca. 9000 B.C., and trace urbanization as far as Imperial Rome and Late Antiquity. The purpose of the course is to examine the characteristics of urbanism, and the archeological evidence for settlement structure, urbanization and state-formation in different cultures of the ancient Mediterranean world.

Credit Hours: 3

AMS 1150: The Archaeology of Ancient Lives

This course introduces the methods and goals of classical archaeology to explore how people lived in the Mediterranean region in the days of the ancient Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, and their neighbors. Along the way we will study parts of our own contemporary human landscape in Columbia (and maybe learn to look at columns in some unexpected ways). Classes are a combination of lecture, group discussions, and activities. Graded on A-F basis only.

AMS 1170: Gods, Heroes and Monsters: Greek Myth in the Visual Arts

Meet the gods, heroes and monsters of ancient Greece face to face! Introduction to the artistic traditions according to which the pre-Christian Greeks depicted their myths in painting and in sculpture, combined with explorations into some of the ancient social contexts in which depictions of divine and heroic figures and their monstrous opponents were displayed, including temples and wine-drinking parties. Comparison and contrast of ancient artifacts with medieval and modern visual adaptations of the same Greek stories, including ballet choreography and rock music videos. By the end of this course, students will have gained the ability to recognize, decipher, and interpret the coded stylistic conventions that ancient Greek artists used to visualize their myths.

Credit Hours: 3

AMS 2030: Ancient Egypt: From the Pharaohs to Hollywood

An introduction to the archaeology, art, and architecture of ancient Egypt, encompassing a roughly 3500-year period, from the Pre-Dynastic period to the period when Egypt was occupied by Greeks and Romans. Through a focus on material remains, the course illuminates the culture of ancient Egypt, including its religion, politics, and other socio-cultural practices. It also examines the reasons for Egypt's timeless appeal, from the Roman Empire to resurging Egyptomania in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries that had considerable cultural influences. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

Recommended: AMS 1060

AMS 2550: Farm to Table in Ancient Greece and Rome: Small Farms and Big Business

(same as HIST 2550, ANTHRO 2140). From the family farm to agro-business enterprises, the production, distribution, and consumption of food in Greece and Rome anticipated nutritional, economic, environmental, and political questions familiar in the twenty-first century. This course uses literary, archaeological, and comparative evidence to explore ancient Mediterranean foodways that include diet, farming, trade, import and export, distribution, and consumption. It also considers the roles played by government in subsidizing and managing the food supply, elucidates the tensions between tenancy and ownership, and exposes the roles of slavery and gender within the ancient food economy. Overall, this course considers agricultural economics ranging from subsistence farming to the state controlled specialization required to feed the ancient Mediterranean's mega-cities.

AMS 2600: Media and Communication in Ancient Greece and Rome

An introduction to communications media in ancient Greece and Rome, from the invention of the alphabet to the fall of the Roman empire. AMS 3625: Ancient Medicine

This course introduces the healing traditions of the ancient Mediterranean world from the second millennium BCE to the end of the Roman Empire. It focuses on medicine among the ancient Egyptians, Mesopotamians, Greeks, and Romans, considering the diseases patients had, the instruments and treatments doctors used, how doctors understood disease and anatomy, the status of doctors in society, the intellectual origins of Greco-Roman medicine, and the archaeological and literary evidence for pathologies in the ancient world. Toward this end, students read medical literature from Mesopotamia, Egypt, Greece, and Rome, asking not only what these texts tell us about ancient medical practices, but also what they indicate, more generally, about the cultures in which they were produced. We will also consider specific archaeological case studies that demonstrate pathologies and other afflictions evident in the skeletal and iconographic record. Specific topics include ancient theories about anatomy and physiology, the relationship between medicine and religion, and the methodology of medical decision-making.

AMS 4240: Archaeology of Cult in the Ancient Mediterranean World

(same as REL_ST 4240; cross-leveled with AMS 7240). For scholars of the ancient Mediterranean world, the terms "cult" and "religion" comprise a dizzying array of beliefs and practices, sanctuaries and spaces, objects, gods, and humans. This diversity challenges contemporary definitions of religion, which tend to follow the model of Protestant Christianity, privileging belief, texts, and rationality. This course takes a different approach to cult and religion in the ancient Mediterranean, focusing instead on the importance of archaeology and material culture in reconstructing ancient religious experience. The course will examine case studies that illustrate the challenges and rewards of thinking about religion materially, from Classical Greece through the beginning of late antiquity.

AMS 4824: Experimental Archaeology

(same as ANTHRO 4824; cross-leveled with ANTHRO 7824, AMS 7824). Recreating and using ancient technology under controlled conditions is one of the best ways to understand how ancient artifacts were made and used in the past. This class offers a blend of theoretical knowledge and practical experience, aiming to reconstruct and understand the techniques and technologies employed by ancient cultures. In this course we will examine the history and potential of experimental archaeology with a majority of the course exploring specific technologies (stone tools, ceramics, metallurgy, etc.) using both published works and hands on activities. By engaging directly with the materials, tools, and methods of the past, students will gain a deeper appreciation for ancient innovations and the complexities of archaeological interpretation.

Credit Hours: 3

Prerequisites: ANTHRO 2020 or Instructors consent
