The Russian program is part of the School of Languages, Literatures, and Cultures (SLLC). In addition to Russian, SLLC offers instruction in Chinese, French, German, Italian, Japanese, Korean, and Spanish. There are courses in language, culture, civilization, literatures in translation, and film. Many courses, such as civilization, culture, literature in translation, and film courses do not require knowledge of a foreign language.

Faculty

Associate Professor T. Langen*Teaching Professor N. Monnier*

* Graduate Faculty Member - membership is required to teach graduate-level courses, chair master's thesis committees, and serve on doctoral examination and dissertation committees.

** Doctoral Faculty Member - membership is required to chair doctoral examination or dissertation committees. Graduate faculty membership is a prerequisite for Doctoral faculty membership.

Undergraduate

- BA in Russian (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/russian/ba-russian/>)
- Minor in Russian (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/collegeofartsandscience/russian/minor-russian/>)

Dual Degrees and Double Majors

As a double major or a dual degree has become an ever more popular choice, an increasing number of students choose German or Russian as one of their majors. Students looking forward to a career in medicine or in the sciences use a double major to ensure a thorough background in the humanities to balance their scientific studies. Double majors within the College of Arts and Science can be arranged and, if the second degree program is identified early, dual degree programs outside the college are also possible. Combined programs with journalism, international studies, education and business are frequent choices. Within the college, combinations with political science, history, philosophy, art history, and the sciences are popular double major programs.

Departmental Honors - Russian

Departmental Honors are available for student majoring in Russian with a minimum 3.5 GPA in the Russian major and 3.3 GPA overall. Students must complete a minimum of three literature courses, two of which must be at the 4000 level, with no grades below a B. At the discretion of the department, students may write a thesis paper in lieu of one of the 4000 level literature courses.

Graduate

The Russian program does not offer a graduate program. The University does offer post-baccalaureate opportunities in a number of related areas.

The catalog provides a complete list of these degree options (<https://catalog.missouri.edu/degreesanddegreeprograms/>).

RUSS 2350: Understanding Russia through Film

How does the Russian-speaking world see itself? Europe and the United States have often viewed Russia as "other," and sometimes as an enemy or a backwards civilization. Some have viewed Russia as an "enigma," soulful and not fit for this world. In this course we will use film to explore how Russian speakers themselves understand Russia. We will watch 14 major Russian-language films from the post-Soviet era (starting in 1991) that depict moments in Russian history from the middle ages to the present. And we will critically consider what these representations of Russian history and culture suggest about Russian identity today. We will pay special attention to how Russian-language films present difference (ethnic, political, religious, gender, sexual, etc.), or "otherness," as a way of defining national identity. And we will analyze the relation of national identity constructs to social inequities. We will consider how films present groups of people within a society as "other"; how films present difference across Russian-speaking nations; and how Russia imagines itself as "other" or as a marginalized outsider. The course may be offered face to face OR in an asynchronous online format. For both versions, assignments will include watching films and responding to them in individual and small-group modes; taking open-book quizzes on brief lectures on Russian history and culture; and collaborating on a final group project to curate and create a webpage for a Russian-language film series. Students will gain foundational knowledge of Russian history and culture; will practice critical thinking through analyzing films in individual and collaborative modes; will develop written and oral communication; and will develop skills in intercultural fluency as they engage with Russian culture in its diversity.

RUSS 3380: Sinners, Saints, and Madmen: 19th Century Russian Literature

Sinners, Saints, and Madmen is a discussion-based survey course of 19th-century Russian prose that traces the development of signature themes of Russian literature that continue to the present, such as hagiography; "madness"; the myth of St. Petersburg; superfluous men and sacrificial women. It also considers the complicated relationship of Russian literature and its authors to both the present moment and the historical past. Authors include major figures of the long Russian literary 19th century (Pushkin, Gogol, Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Chekhov) as well as overshadowed ones. Readings and discussion in English; no previous knowledge of Russian literature or culture required.

RUSS 3390: True Fictions: Russian Prose since 1900

Survey of Russian prose fiction of the twentieth and early twenty-first century. During this time Russia experienced a series of dizzying changes in society and culture. Against this backdrop of tumultuous change, Russian writers responded, often more rapidly and insightfully than the state's cultural/political ideologues themselves. As we examine the continuing development of Russian prose in this period, we will consider topics such as literary experimentation and "revolution" and its aftermath; the interaction of the Russian writer with both their historical time and a larger literary tradition; and the (re)creation of times and places, real and imagined. Course provides a history of Russian prose fiction after 1900, explores various theories of analytical reading of imaginative prose, and hones writing skills about evaluative reading. Readings, lecture and discussion in English; no previous knowledge of Russian literature is assumed.

RUSS 3450: Russia @ War

One historian of Russia, Gregory Carleton, has spoken of the history of Russia as a "story of war." How have war and cultures of militarism shaped Russian history and culture? How has Russia at war shaped global politics through the ages? Russia is one of the world's imperial nations, meaning that its national identity centers its powers of expansion and domination. In our examination of Russia's "story of war" we will include the accounts of peoples who have experienced Russia's military and imperial aggression, and we will compare these accounts with Russian perspectives. Graded on A-F basis only.

RUSS 3710: Refugee and Migration Studies: A Cultural-Historical Introduction

(same as GERMAN 3710). After the US, Germany and Russia have the world's largest migrant populations. This introduction to refugee and migration studies takes both geographic centers as lenses through which to view key concepts, categories and questions relating to why groups of people move from one region or locality to another. The course is organized by types of migration -- voluntary and involuntary--even as it problematizes this distinction and many others. In particular, we will investigate how migration relates to nation-building and national identity. Topics cover movements in (what are now) Germany and Russia from about 300 CE to the present day. Students will work not only with historiographical and scholarly texts, but also with novels, memoirs, paintings and film to explore the work that cultural representations of migration do.

Credit Hours: 3

RUSS 4820: Blogging the World: The Web in Cultural Context

(same as FRENCH 4820; cross-leveled with FRENCH 7820, GERMAN 7820, RUSS 7820). Innovative interdisciplinary course addresses issues of access to international news and specific cultural context working in cross-disciplinary teams. Students in journalism, foreign language, international studies, political science and various other disciplines track cultural developments and information on no-US Web sites, blogs and digital social networks along with exploring various historical forms of communication that preceded the digital era of the Web. Students analyze the potential and limitations/ effects of blogs and the web in specific contemporary cultural contexts and as part of the broader historical evolution of the web. The course is taught in English. The goal of this course is two-fold; students learn the particulars of web blogging, explore various features of the contemporary social network landscape while focusing on the concept of culture, in particular the cultures of Europe and the US. Questions asked are: what is culture? What is common or popular right now in other cultures? And how do new social networks amplify or alter certain features or culture across national and international contests?
