About the PhD Program in Public Affairs
The Harry S Truman School of Public Affairs at the University of Missouri offers an interdisciplinary PhD in Public Affairs that prepares graduates for careers in universities, colleges and applied research settings in the public, private and nonprofit sectors. Students complete core sequences in public policy and management as well as research methods, and specializations tailored to students’ research interests.

Acceptance Criteria
In making its decision, the PhD committee considers:
• The applicant’s record of academic achievement (Applicants typically have undergraduate GPAs higher than 3.0, and graduate GPAs higher than 3.5.)
• The quality of the written statement explaining why the applicant wants to pursue the degree
• The quality of the applicant’s writing sample
• Evaluations contained in letters of recommendation
• Acceptable performance on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE). Applicants typically have combined scores of 310 or higher
• Results of a personal interview with the applicant in person or by telephone
• Other factors bearing upon the candidate’s potential for success

Application Procedure
1. Applications for the PhD program are accepted for fall entrance only. For a prospective student’s application to be complete, the Truman School must receive all required materials by January 3.
