Director of Graduate Studies: Victor McFarland

Graduate study in history at MU provides the opportunity to work with faculty who have compiled a distinguished record of scholarship, receiving major awards from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the National Science Foundation, the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation, the National Humanities Center and many other sponsors. Their books have won prizes from the American Historical Association, the Organization of American Historians, and other national and regional scholarly organizations.

Graduate students work closely with professors in advanced seminars and write theses and dissertations on a wide variety of topics. The research training and teaching opportunities available to MU graduate students offers valuable preparation for careers inside and outside the academy. MU history PhDs have found positions at more than forty different colleges and universities across the United States, as well as private and public high schools, archives, museums, and historical societies.

Areas of Study

Lecture courses, seminars, and directed study projects are available on a wide variety of historical topics. While students are expected to get specialized training in the fields of their choice, they are also urged to develop a broad historical background.

Facilities and Resources

Ellis Library has substantial research materials in all fields of graduate study, including an unusual collection of more than 5,000 pamphlets on 17th- and 18th-century British history and 18th- and 19th-century British and continental journals, including publications of all the major academies. The Health Sciences Library has excellent publications on the history of medicine. An additional resource is the Western Historical Manuscript Collection, a unique repository of material for regional studies in political, social and economic history. The State Historical Society of Missouri has an outstanding library of finding aids and primary and secondary works dealing with Missouri history. MU graduate students can also draw on the resources of the Truman Library in Independence, Missouri.

Internal Funding

The department provides qualified students the opportunity to gain college-level teaching experience as teaching assistants for undergraduate courses under the direction of a senior instructor. Pending administrative approval and availability of funding, students on half-time fellowships earn stipends of at least $19,373.00 at the MA level, and $20,776.00 at the PHD level. Each appointment is subject to annual review and may be renewed up to a maximum of six years. Applicants may also be nominated for competitive Graduate School fellowships awarded to entering students, which may provide additional stipend funding.

HIST 1405: Understanding Africa
The purpose of this course is twofold. First, it provides an introduction to the cultures and societies of Africa. It begins by discussing common misunderstandings and stereotypes about the African continent and its people. As the course proceeds, we will look at fiction and scholarship from Africa which respond to these misunderstandings and also offer glimpses into aspects of the lives of black African peoples. We will proceed to discuss aspects of history, culture, politics, gender, the environment, health and development in Africa. Second, this course is designed to sharpen our analytical and writing skills. As we discuss each of the assigned readings and videos, we will talk about the purposes of authors and filmmakers. Recognizing that authors and filmmakers have specific artistic and intellectual goals in telling their stories is the first step in gaining the ability to analyze their work. We will, therefore, ask how the author's or filmmakers' purpose influences the historical and social context in which the story is set, the decisions by the author about what information to include or to omit and, finally, the point-of-view taken by the author and filmmaker. We will put these skills to use in writing our one of own papers for this course. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 3560: The Scientific Revolution
We will examine changing scientific beliefs and practices from 1500 to 1800, a time often referred to as the Scientific Revolution and as the birth of modern science. At the core, this is an examination of how knowledge itself changed: how it was gathered, tested and disseminated. We will also examine how the study of the natural world branched from one subject ("natural philosophy") into multiple specialized disciplines including astronomy, physics, botany, biology, geology and chemistry.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 3640: Reformations and Religious Conflicts in Early Modern Europe
Between the Black Death (1350) and the Peace of Westphalia (1648), western and central Europe saw a variety of natural disasters, wars, political and economic transformations, and the split of Western Christianity (or: the birth of Protestant/Evangelical Christianity in opposition to the Roman Catholic faith that had dominated for 1000+ years). Everyone was talking about "reformations" (the need to reform religion, government, education, etc.) as well as "The End" (the thought that things were so bad that the Apocalypse was surely near, as the rise of heresies, plagues, famines, wars, witches etc. made clear). Throughout this course, we shall focus on the cohesion and tension between religious, social, economic, political, and psychological factors as a complex matrix, within which the Reformation movement took shape. Our goal is to recognize and elucidate the various contextual structures that influenced the unfolding of this history, and to give equal prominence to those less quantifiable elements such as religious motivation and mentality, without which the period cannot be properly understood. The hopes and fears of women and men, just as much as any social or economic factors, helped cast the drama of unfolding events.

HIST 3815: Africa and the World: Studies in African Histories, Cultures and Politics
(same as BL_STU 3815). For millennia, Africans have interacted with people from other parts of the world. Africans from the south central and eastern parts of the continent have, for example, participated in the Indian Ocean global network for over a thousand years. Those from West Africa have participated in a vast commercial network through the Sahara. Since the sixteenth century millions of Africans were forcibly shipped across the Atlantic Ocean to toil in mines and plantations in the Americas. They carried with them knowledge, expertise and cultures fundamental to the making of this world. This course traces this history of Africa's interactions with the wider world. It is organized around two broad themes: the impact of these interactions on African societies and the impact of Africans on the societies with which they interacted. Graded on A-F basis only.
Credit Hours: 3

HIST 3820: Twentieth Century China
History of China from Nationalist Revolution of 1911 to present. A problem-oriented course: special emphasis on Mao and Maoist ideology, social, literary and cultural history also receive attention.
Credit Hours: 3

HIST 3845: Rights and Revolutions in Asia
Since the nineteenth century, the presence of imperial powers in Asia remade culture and politics. In the early twentieth century, underground revolutionary movements emerged throughout Asia to challenge the extension of empire and fight for the right to national self-determination. These transnational networks of thinkers, writers, politicians, artists and activists are central to the history of modern regions of East Asia, South Asia, and Southeast Asia. This course explores some of the key thinkers and revolutionary movements across Asia to understand the entangled histories of empire, nation, and rights in the early twentieth century. Some of the central concepts and themes in this course include sovereignty, nationalism, anti-colonialism, race, and pan-Asianism. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 3855: Japan and Britain, 1850-1940: The ‘Two Island Empires’
This course examines the turbulent history of relations between two self-styled ‘island empires’: Britain and Japan. It covers the period from the end of Tokugawa rule to the outbreak of the Second World War, focusing on major episodes that drove forward changes in the relationship between the two countries. Throughout, it examines the testimony of the merchants, sailors, scholars, diplomats and others whose lives were shaped by Anglo-Japanese encounters, within the broader historical frameworks of the growth of both British and Japanese imperialism in East Asia, and the profound changes within the Japanese state. Topics include: the ‘re-opening’ of Japan and the Meiji restoration; the Iwakura Embassy and the project of Meiji state-building; cultural exchange; British observations of the Japanese at war; interwar tensions and the war in the Pacific; and how Anglo-Japanese relations in this period in particular are being remembered and recalled in Japan today. Using selected historical accounts and primary sources, this course provides a window onto landmark events in the Anglo-Japanese relationship, and explores how these were understood by contemporaries and participants alike.

HIST 4040: Slavery and the Crisis of the Union: The American Civil War Era
(same as BL_STU 4040, CNST_DEM 4040; cross-leveled with HIST 7040). This class explores the history of the Civil War era, a transformative moment in both U.S. and world history. Our goal is to explore and answer a number of questions of great historical significance: How and why did slavery persist in an age of liberal democracy? Why did the pre-war Union prove unable to tolerate the plural visions and diverse institutions of its people? Was the descent into war more a measure of institutional weakness than of the intensity of moral conflict? What were the constituent elements of the competing wartime ‘nationalisms’ that evolved in both north and south? How and why did a war that began to restore the Union become one for emancipation? How was it the forerunner of modern, “total” warfare? Did the governmental, socio-economic and racial changes wrought by war constitute a ‘second American revolution’? Were the limits or the achievements of post-war Reconstruction more notable? And, last but certainly not least, how did the triumph of the Union condition the political and economic development of a rapidly globalizing world?

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 4235: The Wire: Race, Urban Inequality, and the "Crisis" of the American City
(cross-leveled with HIST 7235). The HBO series "The Wire", a crime drama based on the border city of Baltimore, exposed the interlocking, structural realities giving shape to the landscapes, neighborhoods, and lived experiences of urban America during the early twenty-first century. Through vivid storytelling, "The Wire" complicates understandings of the "urban crisis" through a focus on the inner workings of major institutions such as the media, public schools, politics, underground economies, public housing, and the criminal justice system and on the ways in which poor and working-class black residents negotiate power and survival. Using the cable series as a lens, this class offers students the opportunity to critically examine the historical, economic, social, and political dimensions of urban inequality.
Credit Hours: 3

HIST 4645: Witchcraft and Witch Hunting in Pre-Modern Europe
(cross-leveled with HIST 7645). The surviving evidence indicates that between 1400 and 1700, at least 50,000 women, men, and children were executed for practicing witchcraft. Is there an explanation for this? Does it make any sense in terms of the intellectual, religious, social, political, and economic contexts of this period in European history? Fundamental to this course are the assumptions that there are many, not one, reasonable explanations for witchcraft beliefs and persecutions, and that when studied in terms of the various historical contexts this phenomenon must be understood as an integral part of European society during these centuries.

HIST 4660: Gender, War, and Migration: Europe, 1914 to the Present
(same as WGST 4660; cross-leveled with HIST 7660, WGST 7660). Scholars have long recognized the fundamental ways that war and migration marked the lives of European women and men in the 20th century, and yet, rarely have they focused on the interrelations between mobilities, violence and gender. This class explores how war and mass migrations inscribed new gendered, racial and class hierarchies into the European landscape, and created new kinds of political and social divides. The total wars of World War I and World War II, requiring the participation of civilians and soldiers, erasing lines separating the home front from the battlefield, forcing millions to flee their homes, and drawing men and women from the colonies into the war effort reshaped notions of gender, work, family, nation and citizenship within Europe. The subsequent wars of decolonization and post war migrations, followed by the conflicts that erupted at the end of the Cold War challenged the postwar gender ideals underpinning the European welfare state and the European Union, and fueled the rise of contemporary xenophobic and racist populist movements. Course materials will include historical monographs, articles, novels, memoirs and films.

HIST 4835: Race and Politics in South Africa
(same as CNST_DEM 4835, BL_STU 4835; cross-leveled with HIST 7835, CNST_DEM 7835, BL_STU 7835). Between 1948 and 1994, race was the formal organizing principle of the South African state. However, way before the institutionalization of the policy of Apartheid in 1948, race had underlined social, economic and political relations in what is now South Africa. Significantly, democratic South Africa is still grappling with the legacies of racialized rule. This course is about this nexus between race and politics in the history of South Africa. Organized around seminars, guest lectures and tours, the course introduces students to how scholars have understood race and politics in this Southern African nation. It further examines the social and economic context in which race was deployed as an instrument of making difference and exercising power and how this is contested. Finally, the course examines the legacies of racialized rule in democratic South Africa. Graded on A-F basis only.

HIST 7040: Slavery and the Crisis of the Union: The American Civil War Era
(cross-leveled with HIST 4040). This class explores the history of the Civil War era, a transformative moment in both U.S. and world history. Our goal is to explore and answer a number of questions of great historical significance: How and why did slavery persist in an age of liberal democracy? Why did the pre-war Union prove unable to tolerate the plural visions and diverse institutions of its people? Was the descent into war more a measure of institutional weakness than of the intensity of moral conflict? What were the constituent elements of the competing wartime ‘nationalisms’ that evolved in both north and south? How and why did a war that began to restore the Union become one for emancipation? How was it the forerunner of modern, ‘total’ warfare? Did the governmental, socio-economic and racial changes wrought by war constitute a ‘second American revolution’? Were the limits or the achievements of post-war Reconstruction more notable? And, last but certainly not least, how did the triumph of the Union condition the political and economic development of a rapidly globalizing world? Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

(cross-leveled with HIST 4232). This course focuses on white collar and celebrity crime in America, mostly since 1970. From airline hijacking to celebrity murder, wall street trading, the dark web, Silicon Valley, and financial corruption in the U.S. and overseas. The idea is not to determine who was guilty or innocent, but to examine how white collar and celebrity crime has been perceived in broader American culture and its broader consequences. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7235: The Wire: Race, Urban Inequality, and the "Crisis" of the American City
(cross-leveled with HIST 4235). The HBO series "The Wire", a crime drama based on the border city of Baltimore, exposed the interlocking, structural realities giving shape to the landscapes, neighborhoods, and lived experiences of urban America during the early twenty-first century. Through vivid storytelling, "The Wire" complicates understandings of the "urban crisis" through a focus on the inner workings of major institutions such as the media, public schools, politics, underground economies, public housing, and the criminal justice system and on the ways in which poor and working-class black residents negotiate power and survival. Using the cable series as a lens, this class offers students the opportunity to critically examine the historical, economic, social, and political dimensions of urban inequality. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

<td>HIST 7645</td>
<td>Witchcraft and Witch Hunting in Pre-Modern Europe</td>
<td>(cross-leveled with HIST 4645). The surviving evidence indicates that between 1400 and 1700, at least 50,000 women, men, and children were executed for practicing witchcraft. Is there an explanation for this? Does it make any sense in terms of the intellectual, religious, social, political, and economic contexts of this period in European history? Fundamental to this course are the assumptions that there are many, not one, reasonable explanations for witchcraft beliefs and persecutions, and that when studied in terms of the various historical contexts this phenomenon must be understood as an integral part of European society during these centuries. Graded on A-F basis only.</td>

HIST 7685: The Holocaust
(same as PEA_ST 7685; cross-leveled with PEA_ST 4685, HIST 4685).
Provides a historical account, psychological analysis, and philosophical contemplation of the Holocaust. Examines the Nazi regime's systematic attempt to exterminate the Jews of Europe along with a number of additional population groups. Course is organized around the use of primary sources (written texts, photographs, films, and oral testimony) as well as the practice of historiography (for graduate students). Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7700: Imperial Russia, 1682-1825
(cross-leveled with HIST 4700). Russia in the 18th and early 19th centuries, with special emphasis on the reigns of Peter I, Catherine II, and Alexander I.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7710: The Russian Revolution
(cross-leveled with HIST 4710). Analyzes the transformation of Russian society that produced the collapse of autocracy, efforts to create a parliamentary government, the Bolshevik seizure of power in 1917, and the civil war that followed.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7800: Modern China and Japan: War, Imperialism and Memory
(cross-leveled with HIST 4800). This course examines the interaction between Japan and China since the late nineteenth century in an effort to understand deeper historical reasons behind the rising tension in East Asia at the present time.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7820: Constitutionalism in the Americas
(cross-leveled with HIST 4821). This course looks at the history of constitutions and constitutional democracy in the Americas as a whole - the United States and Latin America. The U.S. Constitution was a pioneering document in the Americas, and this course examines the international influence of the United States' experiment with constitutional democracy. While the course will examine the inspiration of the U.S. Constitution, it will also examine republics that drew upon the same philosophical antecedents that inspired the founders of the United States but may have opted for different forms and practices. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7825: Africa from the Slave Trade to Independence
(same as BL_STU 7825; cross-leveled with HIST 4825, BL_STU 4825).
This course offers an examination of the lives of Africans as they encountered the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade and European Colonialism. These two forces had a lasting impact on African societies. Topics include the origins, impact and legacies of both the Slave Trade and European colonialism on African societies. The course will especially pay attention to Africans’ struggles to free themselves from slavery and colonial domination. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7835: Race and Politics in South Africa
(same as CNST_DEM 7835, BL_STU 7835; cross-leveled with HIST 4835, CNST_DEM 4835, BL_STU 4835). Between 1948 and 1994, race was the formal organizing principle of the South African state. However, way before the institutionalization of the policy of Apartheid in 1948, race had underlined social, economic and political relations in what is now South Africa. Significantly, democratic South Africa is still grappling with the legacies of racialized rule. This course is about this nexus between race and politics in the history of South Africa. Organized around seminars, guest lectures and tours, the course introduces students to how scholars have understood race and politics in this Southern African nation. It further examines the social and economic context in which race was deployed as an instrument of making difference and exercising power and how this is contested. Finally, the course examines the legacies of racialized rule in democratic South Africa. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7865: Buying Desire: History of Consumption
(cross-leveled with HIST 4865). This course explores the history of consumption practice in various cultural contexts. The course is divided into four parts: "Masses As Consumers", "Selling/Consuming Cultures", "Consumption as (Postcolonial) Modernity", and "Consumption and the Nation". Under each section are thematically related texts on particular cultural contexts. The reading of ethnographic texts on consumption is to be accompanied by critical discussions that locate consumption within the practices of the nation-state-making and global product-marketing. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7880: Chinese Migration: From Yellow Peril to Model Minority
(cross-leveled with HIST 4880). This course surveys Chinese emigration in the global context over the span of five centuries. We will pay special attention to the changing relationships between China and Chinese migrants. Our emphasis will be on history as a process of negotiation and contestation of heterogeneous groups or individuals through creative and selective activities.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7910: History in the Public: An Introduction to the Theory and Practice of Public History
(cross-leveled with HIST 4910). The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the world of public history, the central questions and debates in the field, and to offer students the opportunity to practice public history. Graded on A-F basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7940: Internship in History
(cross-leveled with HIST 4940). Professional training in history and archive-related fields. Graded on S/U basis only.

Credit Hours: 3

HIST 7990: Economic Analysis of Policy & Regulation
(cross-leveled with ABM 4990). Apply economic concepts and tools to analyze the policy-making process and the implications of policy for individuals, firms, markets and society. Policy topics include, among other things, agricultural support programs, environmental policy, international trade, international development, and agribusiness regulation.

Credit Hours: 3

Recommended: Graduate students should have previous coursework in basic econometrics and at least intermediate-level micro economic theory.
